

Frank Bessler spent most of his adult life around Akron Ohio. After he married Carrie Bowland he managed to make a living as a carpenter. He tried a number of things and had several inventions including a disappearing stairway that eventually made him a small fortune.

He was a Catholic and Carrie joined when they were married which they strongly supported all their life.

They never had any children.

He built a beautiful home on a lake south of Akron and also acquired other homes there.

His stairway factory made good progress and when he died was very sound financially.

He left his estate in trust in favor of the Church but Carrie was permitted to the company profits the rest of her life.

Carrie ran the company for a number of years and left a sizeable estate to her relatives when she died. The factory and real estate was held in trust in the hands of the lawyer who drew up the wills.

In his later life Frank felt that he had powers of prediction and benediction and on the basis of predictions that came true he attempted to get recognition from the Church and consulted a number of high Church officials who seemed more interested in his generous contributions.

Frank could read or write very poorly and his secretary recorded intimate experiences in little note books.

When Carrie died I read some of these notes and he said that on several occasions he had been transported in his sleep to a heavenly area where he met Christ and other biblical characters and that he saw and talked to a dog with a mans head.

Carrie Bessler has been dead many years now and it has just dawned on me that many blessings have graced me and my family since knowing these people.

Carrie gave freely of her love and substance to all of her kin. In appreciation we can give of our love and substance to our families.
